

I am opposed to opening in-flight commercial airliners to cell phone traffic. Just because we can do something technically, does not mean that we should do it. The confined social setting of an airliner is not the place to introduce potentially unsettling situations caused by discourteous cell-phone users. Airline travel is tense enough as it is without adding this unnecessary disturbance.

Robert B. Newlin